

Please note that this information applies only to Federal Elections. Rules on whether non-citizens can vote in state and local elections differ by jurisdiction.

A Message from True the Vote to Non Citizens

We understand that there may be people who are talking with you about voting in an American election.

Please know that these people are misleading you. And they're putting you and your family at risk.

The consequences of being charged with and prosecuted for vote fraud can be severe and long-lasting for non-citizens. It's essential for individuals to understand the laws regarding voting eligibility and to avoid engaging in any illegal activities that could jeopardize their immigration status and future opportunities in the United States.

If a non-citizen is charged with vote fraud and prosecuted in the United States, they can face several serious consequences, including:

1. Criminal Charges: Vote fraud is a felony offense in many jurisdictions, punishable by significant fines and imprisonment. The exact penalties vary depending on the severity of the offense and the laws of the state where the crime occurred.
2. Deportation: Non-citizens convicted of vote fraud may face deportation or removal proceedings. Committing a felony offense can trigger immigration consequences, potentially leading to deportation and the loss of legal status in the United States.
3. Ineligibility for Citizenship: A conviction for vote fraud can render a non-citizen ineligible for future immigration benefits, including naturalization and citizenship. Immigration authorities may deny or revoke applications for citizenship based on a criminal record involving vote fraud.
4. Loss of Voting Rights: In addition to facing legal consequences, individuals convicted of vote fraud may lose their right to vote in future elections, even if they eventually become U.S. citizens. This loss of voting rights can have long-term implications for their civic participation and engagement in American elections.

5. Stigma and Reputation Damage: Being charged with and convicted of vote fraud can damage a person's reputation and standing in the community. It may also lead to social stigma and discrimination, making it difficult to rebuild trust and credibility.
6. Financial Consequences: In addition to fines imposed as part of the criminal sentence, individuals convicted of voter fraud may incur substantial legal expenses for defense attorneys, court fees, and other related costs.

Please do not allow yourself to be deceived by people who are only looking to use you to further a political agenda.